K

K (kə), the eleventh letter of the alphabet in English, was an original letter of the Roman alphabet, taken from the Greek Kappa K, originally ϰ, from Phœnician and general Semitic Kaph 𐤀. Its sound in Greek and Latin was, as in English, that of the brick-voiced stop consonant, or guttural tenus. But at an early period of Latin orthography the letter C (orig. repr. Gr. Gamma) was employed for the k sound, and the letter K fell into disuse, except in a few archaic spellings.

In Old English, K is merely a supplemental symbol occasionally used instead of C for the guttural sound. But after the Conquest in accordance with the Norman usage, C was retained for the guttural only before a, o, u, i, and K was substituted for the same sound before e, y, and (later) æ. Hence, in native words, initial K now appears only before e, i, y, and before u (= OE. u), where it is no longer pronounced in Standard English. Medially and finally, k is used after a consonant (ask, twinkle), or long vowel (wake, like, week), after a short vowel, ck is used instead of c or ch, but the unstressed suffix, formerly -ich (mustick), is now -k, though, when a suffix in e or i follows, k reappears (traffic, trafficker, trafficking).

The native K words, being thus confined to Ke-, Ki-, Kn-, are few. But many foreign words of recent adoption, instead of being spelt with C before a, o, u, *i, r, h, now take K in these positions; and in words from Greek also many prefer to retain K, instead of latinizing it to C. In a very few words (not of English formation) K repr. ts C χ esp. in be word. in kilo - as hlog amine &c.*

-let, suffix, appended to sbs. The oldest words in Eng. with this ending are adoptions of OF. words formed by adding the dim. suffix -et, -ete (see -ET) to sbs. in -el (repr. the L. dim. suffix -ellum, -ellam, or the L. ending -ale of neut. adjs.; see -AL). Examples are bracelet, chippet, crosslet, frontlet, hamlet, etc. Of these only crosslet suggests by its form and sense a dim. of an Eng. word. Possibly Fr. dims. were directly imitated by some Eng. writers.

An early dim. in -let is armlet (sense 2, 'little arm of the sea', recorded 1538), others are ownlet a 559 ringle Shaks kniglet (Florio, after F. roulelet). But the formation did not become common until the 18th c.

In a few words (whistlet, armlet, necklet, etc.) the suffix is appended to sbs. denoting parts of the body, forming names for articles of ornament or attire. The oldest word of this type, armlet, was perh. suggested by a false analysis of frontlet; in the later words the analogy of bracelet has prob. been chiefly operative.

-logy (lɒdʒi), earlier -logye, an ending occurring orig. in wds. adapted from Gr. words in -λογία (the earliest, e.g. theology, through Fr. -logie, mod. L. -logia). In some instances the terminal element is λόγος word, discourse (e.g. in τετραλογία tetralogy, τριλογία tri-logy); more commonly it is the root λογ (ablaut-var. of λεγ-, λέγειν to speak of LOGO). In this latter case, the sbs. in -logia usually denote the character, action, or deprivation of knowledge of a person described by an adj. or sb. in -λογος, meaning either 'one who speaks (in a certain way)', or '(one) who treats of (a certain subje.)'. Hence (1) vs. Anglicized as brachylogy, canology, eulogy, tauto-logy, etc.; and (2) names of sciences or departments of study, e.g. theology, astrology, etc. Words of the last-mentioned class, in which the first element is always a sb., have o for their combining vowel, following the Gr. analogy, exceptions are pathology and neurology. LXX. 1662. The Roman numeral symbol for Seventy; hence, abbrev. for SEPTUAGINT.

-ly, suffix 1, appended to sbs. to form adjs., represents OE. -lic :—OE. -līko-, from the sb līkum appearance, form, body (see LICU)
The primitive force of the suffix is therefore 'having the appearance or form indicated by the first element of the word'

The general of the suff x are b ving e q es app op a e o c a c e s o b h ng e g b δ g a y w a d y k g y a y l n o b e use s to form adjs. denoting periodic recurence, as daily, hourly, yearly, etc.

-ly, suffix 2, forming adjs., represents OE.
-lice, derived from -līko- (see -LY) with an adverb-forming suffix -δ, repr. the ending of the abl. fem. (pre-Teut. -āi) or neut. (pre-Teut. -ōi); or, according to others, that of the instrumental neut. (pre-Teut. -ōm).

In OE. an adv. with this suffix must have implied the existence of an adj. with the suffix corresponding to -LY 1. In OE., however, there are instances (e.g. boldlice boldly, sult- lice sweetly) in which an adv. has been formed from a simple adj. without the intervention of an adj. in -lic, and this became the regular mode of forming an adv. of manner. Down to the 17th c., -ly was frequently attached even to adjs. in -ly, as godly, kindly, lowly, stately; but these formations are now generally avoided by recourse to some periphrastic form of expression. In daily, hourly, etc., the adj. and the adv. are identical in form. Partly and purposely are examples of an adv. f sb. + -ly with no related adj. Advs. in -ly were in several cases app. formed in ME. in imitation of OF.
adverbs in -ment, before the corresponding adjective existed in English. Since the 16th c. the suffix has been added to ordinal numerals to form advs. denoting serial position, as firstly, secondly, etc., after F. premièrement, etc.

When -ly is attached to a disyllabic or polysyllabic adj. in -le, the word is contracted, as ably, simply, etc.; monosyllables in -le retain the e in writing, as solutely; wholly is peculiar.
Advs. of more than one syll. ending in y change y to i before -ly, as merely; in formations from monosyllabic adjs. the usage varies, e.g. silly, stily. In daily, truly, the e is dropped. Adjs. in -ic nearly always form advs. in -ically.

Mis- (mis), prefix 1, repr. OE. mis-. OTeut. misso- (whence missan MISSE v.) The *adj. misso- had app. two senses: (1) divergent, astray, (2) mutual, alternate.

The hyphen is now employed chiefly in new or rarely used formations, and in words like mis-say, mis-cite, etc.

The predominant meaning of the prefix is that of 'amiss', 'wrongly', 'badly', 'improperly', 'mistakenly'.

In early ME. many new compounds were made, some of which appear to have been suggested by French formations with mes (see MIS-); a word like misjudge has prob. a double origin, being partly of native formation, and partly an adaptation of OF. misjuger. The most prolific period for the formation of mis-compounds was the 17th c., when writers such as Bacon, Donne, and Sp. Hall employed them largely.

In OE. mis was prefixed to vba., active and passive pple.s, nouns of action and condition, and acjs. In ME. its composition with agent-nouns and adverbs followed as a matter of course.

1. Prefixed to verbs, with the meaning 'amiss', 'badly', 'wrongly', 'perversely', 'mistakenly', as misaid, mispro, mislead, mislike, etc. b. In the 14th-16th c., in some words, as misdeem, etc., mis took the force of 'unfavourably', and in missover, etc., it intensified the notion of un- or dis-
